

The $750 Billion Question:
Does Our Government Promote Economic Mobility?

Tuesday, December 1, 2009

Heather Boushey is a senior economist at the Center for American Progress. Prior to joining the Center, she was a senior economist with the Joint Economic Committee of the U.S. Congress, and a senior economist with the Center for Economic and Policy Research. Her recent research has focused on tracking the recession and its impact on workers and their families, women's labor force participation, trends in income inequality, and work/life policy issues.

Kevin A. Hassett is a senior fellow and director of economic policy studies at the American Enterprise Institute. Before that, he was a senior economist at the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, an associate professor of economics and finance at Columbia University, and a policy consultant to the Treasury Department during the George H. W. Bush and Clinton administrations. He served as Senator John McCain's chief economic adviser during the 2000 presidential primaries and a senior economic adviser to the McCain 2008 presidential campaign.

Harry J. Holzer is a professor of public policy at Georgetown University and an institute fellow at the Urban Institute. He is a former chief economist for the U.S. Department of Labor and a former professor of economics at Michigan State University. Holzer's research has focused on the labor market problems of low-wage workers and other disadvantaged groups. He is the author of Reconnecting Disadvantaged Young Men (with Peter Edelman and Paul Offner) and edited Reshaping the American Workforce for a Changing Economy (with Demetra Nightingale).

Eugene Steuerle is an institute fellow and Richard B. Fisher Chair at the Urban Institute. He has served as vice-president of the Peter G. Peterson Foundation, codirector of the Urban-Brookings Tax Policy Center, deputy assistant secretary of the treasury for tax analysis, president of the National Tax Association, and chair of the 1999 technical panel advising Social Security on its methods and assumptions. Steuerle is the author, co-editor, or editor of 15 books, including Contemporary U.S. Tax Policy and Retooling Social Security for the 21st Century.

Sheila Zedlewski (moderator) directs the Urban Institute's Income and Benefits Policy Center, a group of researchers focused on how income is distributed in the United States. Her research deals with retirement income security, poverty, and participation in programs for low-income individuals. Her recent publications include articles on productive aging and poverty among older adults. She currently is analyzing asset accumulation over the life cycle and the potential of using home equity to help finance retirement.