

The Second Awkward Age: Life at 55 and Beyond
March 4, 2010

Scott A. Bass is American University's provost, providing leadership to its six schools and colleges. Bass was previously vice president for research and dean of the graduate school at the University of Maryland, Baltimore County, where he also served as a professor of sociology and public policy. Before that, he was at the University of Massachusetts, Boston for 17 years as a professor in the College of Public and Community Service, the director of the Gerontology Institute, and the head of the Gerontology Center.

Dalmer Hoskins is a special adviser to the U.S. Social Security Administration (SSA). Prior to joining SSA, Hoskins was the managing director of the AARP Public Policy Institute and later a senior policy adviser. From 1995 to 2005, Hoskins was the secretary general of the International Social Security Association, where he also served as the director of research and director of regional activities. He chairs the finance and audit committee of HelpAge International and is a member of the World Demographic and Ageing Association advisory board.

Richard Johnson is a senior fellow at the Urban Institute, where he specializes in health and income security at older ages, older adults' employment during the current economic recession, occupational change at older ages, changes in job demands, and work impediments at older ages. He has written extensively about retirement preparedness, economic hardship in the years before Social Security's early eligibility age, and gender differences in pension wealth. He recently provided assistance to the Federal Taskforce on the Aging of the American Workforce and guest edited two special issues of Research on Aging.

Sandra Y. Nathan is the vice president for workforce development and economic initiatives at the National Council on Aging, where she oversees the Senior Community Service Employment Program, Senior Environmental Employment Program, and Economic Security Initiative. Nathan has two decades of executive leadership in federal and local government and nonprofit social service organizations. Most recently, she served as the president and CEO of the Richmond Children's Foundation and held executive positions with Santa Clara County (California), the San Francisco Department of Aging and Adult Services, and AARP.

Ruth Wooden is the president of Public Agenda. Before joining Public Agenda, she was executive vice president–senior counselor at the international public relations firm Porter Novelli, where she led the Advertising and Cause-Related Marketing Practice. From 1987 to 1999, Wooden was the president of the Advertising Council. From 1978 to 1987, she was senior vice president and managing director at N.W. Ayer Advertising. Wooden serves as the board chair of Civic Ventures and as a board member of Research!America, Teachers Count, Independent Sector, and Demos.