SUMMING UP PUBLIC OPINION ON FEDERAL DEBT AND DEFICITS

February 2010

The federal budget and the national debt are getting a lot of attention lately, but how does the public see this problem? Public Agenda has compiled recent survey data from other organizations that sheds light on how worried the public is about federal finances, how well they understand the issue and potential solutions, and whether they trust the government to address it.

Public Agenda (www.publicagenda.org), is a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization devoted to public opinion and citizen engagement. For more of Public Agenda’s work on the federal deficit and national debt, please visit Our Fiscal Future on Facebook, @FiscalFuture on Twitter, or www.ourfiscalfuture.org.

Concern about deficits and debt:

The public has rated the federal budget deficit and the national debt as an important issue consistently over the past year, and there is evidence that concerns are rising (at least since 2008). Most are also pessimistic that the government will reduce the deficit in the coming years.

- (How important are the following issues to you personally...not at all important, slightly important, moderately important, very important or extremely important?) How about...the federal budget deficit?

Priority among other issues:

While concern about the budget deficit is high, the issue isn't the top priority for most people. Not surprisingly, the greatest emphasis is on the economy and jobs, but terrorism, Social Security, education and Medicare all rank ahead of the deficit. And when asked directly what is more important, paying for health care and paying for education comes on top of reducing the deficit.

- I'd like to ask you some questions about priorities for President Obama and Congress this year. As I read from a list, tell me if you think the item that I read should be a top priority, important but lower priority, not too important or should it not be done.

Please tell me which one of these items you think should be the top priority for the federal government....Job creation and economic growth, national security and terrorism, the deficit and government spending, health care, the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, energy and the cost of gas, social issues such as abortion and same-sex marriage...(If More than one, ask:) Well, if you had to choose just one, which do you think should be the top priority?

Pew Research Center Poll, March 31-April 6, 2009.

Lack of trust in the government to address the problem:

Most Americans think the government can reduce unnecessary spending. At the same time, majorities think that the government is wasteful and don't trust it to manage its finances.

- Do you think the federal government has reduced unnecessary spending as much as it can, or do you think the government could spend less and save more if it tried harder?

9%	Reduced as much as possible
87%	Could spend less and save more
4%	Don't know

Understanding of the problem:

Most Americans are aware of the debate around the federal budget deficit. They have a relatively good idea of what our biggest expenditures are, but they have some misconceptions about key facts. For instance, they overestimate the amount of wasteful spending and foreign aid, and underestimate spending on entitlement programs like Medicare.

- As you may know, the budget deficit is the shortfall when the amount of money the government spends is more than the amount of money it takes in. How much have you heard or read about the federal government's current budget deficit –a lot, some, not much or nothing at all?

42%	A lot

Attitudes towards solutions:

When thinking about ways to reduce the debt or deficit, majorities support cutting discretionary federal programs, but they also support increasing taxes on the wealthiest individuals. A significant minority also favors tax cuts to help stimulate the economy over reducing the deficit.

- I'm going to mention some things the government could do to cut the budget deficit. For each, please tell me if you think this should or should not be a main part of any government approach to the deficit—just answer yes or no....Raise income taxes on the wealthy--individuals making $500,000 or more and households making $1 million or more, cut discretionary federal programs and services by 5% across the board, raise taxes on the middle-class as well as the wealthy, cut the growth of spending on entitlement programs such as Social Security benefits, create a new federal consumption tax, which would be like a federal sales tax that would be on top of any state and local sales tax

66%	Raise income taxes on the wealthy--individuals making $500,000 or more and households making $1 million or more
57%	Cut discretionary federal programs and services by 5% across the board
26%	Raise taxes on the middle-class as well as the wealthy
23%	Cut the growth of spending on entitlement programs such as Social Security benefits
20%	Create a new federal consumption tax, which would be like a federal sales tax that would be on top of any state and local sales tax
5%	None of these (Vol.)/Not sure

Bloomberg Poll, Dec, 2009

- (I'm going to mention some specific government programs that add significantly to the federal deficit. For each, please tell me if the spending is justified and should be continued, was justified but should be cut dramatically, or is not justified at all.)...

Tax cuts for the very wealthy	27%	12%	60%	1%
Government assistance to the banking industry	11%	28%	58%	3%

The war in Afghanistan	45%	26%	26%	3%
The Medicare drug program	71%	11%	12%	6%

Understanding trade-offs:

Because the economy and jobs are their top priorities, it is not surprising that the public is divided as to whether the government should spend money to stimulate the economy or create jobs even if it means increasing the budget deficit. They are also not willing to cut spending in specific categories – health care, education or military spending – in order to reduce the deficit.

- If you were setting priorities for the government these days, would you place a higher priority on...spending more to help the economy recover, or a higher priority on reducing the budget deficit?

47%	Spending more to help the economy recover
47%	Reducing the budget deficit
6%	Don't know/Refused

Pew Research Center for the People & the Press Political Survey, Feb, 2010

- Which comes closer to your own view? The federal government should spend money to create jobs, even if it means increasing the budget deficit. The federal government should not spend money to create jobs and should instead focus on reducing the budget deficit.

47%	Create jobs
45%	Reduce budget deficit
8%	Don't know/No answer

CBS News/New York Times Poll, Feb, 2010

- In order to reduce the federal budget deficit, would you be willing or not willing for the government to decrease spending in areas such as health care or education?

30%	Willing
62%	Not willing
5%	Some, but not others (Vol.)
3%	Don't know/No answer

CBS News/New York Times Poll, Feb, 2010

- In order to reduce the federal budget deficit, would you be willing or not willing to decrease military spending?

45%	Willing
51%	Not willing
2%	Some, but not others (Vol.)
2%	Don't know/No answer

CBS News/New York Times Poll, Feb, 2010

Support for Tea Party movement:

The new Tea Party movement is associated with a few different issues, particularly around the issue of government spending and taxation. The public is more likely to have positive feelings towards the tea party movement if it is noted that its members are protesting over government spending and taxation.

- (Now I'm going to read you the names of several public figures and groups, and I'd like you to rate your feelings toward each one as either very positive, somewhat positive, neutral, somewhat negative, or very negative. If you don't know the name, please just say so.)...The Tea Party movement.

	Dec 2009	Jan 2010
Very positive	20%	14%
Somewhat positive	21%	14%
Neutral	21%	20%
Somewhat negative	10%	6%
Very negative	13%	15%
Don't know name, not sure	15%	31%
