CAREER BRIEF

Bryce Peterson, PhD, is a Senior Research Associate in Urban Institute's Justice Policy Center. He has been the Principal Investigator and Co-Principal Investigator of several projects funded by the National Institute of Justice, the National Institute of Corrections, the Bureau of Justice Assistance, the Annie E. Casey Foundation, and the American Civil Liberties Union. His work has focused on developing and implementing correctional policies for children and families with incarcerated parents, reducing misconduct and contraband in correctional facilities, evaluating video surveillance and body camera technologies in a range of criminal justice settings, and creating an interactive tool to project the impact of policies on the prison population. His other work has focused on reentry, federal justice statistics, community supervision, and law enforcement. He conducts both quantitative and qualitative research and evaluation.

Prior to the Urban Institute, Bryce was the project manager of the Correctional Incident Database, a Pinkerton Graduate Research Fellow at the Research and Evaluation Center in New York City, and a Lecturer at John Jay College, where he taught Criminology, Criminal Justice, and Statistics. His work has appeared in peer reviewed journals, such as The Prison Journal, Crime and Delinquency, American Journal of Criminal Justice, and the Journal of Interpersonal Violence. He has provided expert commentary to print, television, and radio news outlets, such as the Wall Street Journal, Reuters, BuzzFeed, Al Jazeera America Cable News, RT America Cable News, Vox, Vice, Governing, and CityLab (the Atlantic).
